Components of a Successful Cheer/Spirit

Cheerleaders are as much of a part of the history and tradition of high school sports as Friday night football and state basketball tournaments. These individuals have played a significant role in supporting schools' athletic teams and boosting the overall spirit within their schools. Whether schools have traditional sideline cheerleaders or offer competitive spirit programs, the roles these students play in the overall success of a school's athletic program is tremendous. "[Cheerleading is] a unique activity that helps bring together a school and community in a very unique way – around sports," said Bill Seely, president of USA Cheer and executive president of Varsity Spirit Corporation. "School spirit programs have the unique ability to connect a crowd to a game, a community to a school and school groups to each other to feel a part of something bigger than just their particular groups." Stephanie Blackwell, athletic director at Bixby (Oklahoma) High School, also said cheerleading requires a certain type of student. Blackwell, a recent NFHS Citation recipient, coached cheerleading for 18 years at Bixby and won two coed cheer championships before moving into her current role. "I loved being able to develop young athletes through coaching cheerleading every day," Blackwell said. "I considered a good fit for my team to be an athlete who not only possessed the cheerleading requirements – high level of stunt, motions, jumps and tumbling skills – but more importantly, leadership, teamwork, positive attitude and the passion to become a better person through educational-based athletics." Siegal said he would rather have students who are willing to learn and improve than those who walk in the door with outstanding talent right off the bat. He said he learns more from talking to the students than simply watching their tryout.

All of the different duties of a cheer or spirit program must be considered, Seely said. Even at just a run-of-the-mill game, the cheerleaders have many tasks to accomplish and other things to consider. They also need to organize and prepare for special events like homecoming week and pep rallies, so their practices vary throughout the year depending on what needs to be done. "They're not the game, but they are part of the game," Seely said. "They help impact the game through the environment that's created – if they are doing it successfully – but they're not playing the other cheerleading team that's there. They're creating an atmosphere using the band, dancers and the crowd to help foster a great experience for the fans and alumni that attend."

As a coach, Blackwell focused on three aspects of her job to ensure her teams could enjoy a successful season. "First, make all decisions based on what is best for the kids you are working with and be consistent with policies," Blackwell said. "Second, surround yourself with coaches [who are] better than you and who share your coaching philosophy. Finally, teach your athletes how to set goals both in cheerleading and in life and encourage achievement of those goals. "Give the athletes skills to achieve those goals." A goal of a great cheer program, Seely said, should be to react quickly to a negative situation during a game and change it into a positive one. He said he's been at games where the cheerleaders have joined in with acts of poor sportsmanship, but he's also seen cheerleaders use their power to overcome the negativity.

Despite all the roles that cheerleaders have to take, Blackwell always tried to remember to make sure the activity stayed fun for her teams. "Remember daily that you are getting to do what you love," Blackwell said. "There will be ups and downs, but that is all part of coaching. Coaching is sharing your knowledge with your athletes by using discipline, integrity, hard work, sportsmanship, character and fun. "I feel my proudest moment is not the state championships or national titles won, but the joy seen in the cheerleaders who set goals and accomplish them." Siegal also noted that participating in those cheering competitions can go a long way toward helping cheerleaders gain confidence and recognition, which is also key to their success. "We need to be realistic as cheerleading coaches – we do not get the same recognition as boys and girls basketball, football or soccer. When we're at the game, we're there to support them; it's not about us," Siegal said. "When we're competing, then it is about us."

In the end, perhaps the best way to create or maintain a successful cheer or spirit program is to show the cheerleaders just how much of an impact they have, Seely said. "There's nothing better than looking back on all the game film of the fans and the environment that's created inside the schools and share that with the kids," Seely said. "I don't think they realize what an important role they play within the schools."
